THE POLICE POARD.

Investigation of the Charges Against Farrell, Ronacker and Conklin.

Ronacker's Case Taken Under Advise ment, Farrell and Conkling Reinstated-The Lang Resolution Fails to Pass.

The Police Commissioners met in special session yesterday afternoon to dispose of the cases of Patrolmen Farrell, Ronacker and Conklin, against whom charges of loitering had been preferred by Commissioner Cottrell. The three coppers were present with their attorneys, Elam and Sheppard, while not a few witnesses lolled about on the benches in the roll-call room. When the board was called to order Mr. Sheppard arose and moved to quash the charges against the officers, saying that Mr. Cottrell had no right, according to the rules of the board, to prefer the same on information. Further, he had not made the charges as a member of the board, and did Color, Finish and Quality are the essential not set forth when the officers committed the points carefully considered in all our purchases. The attorney held that the misdemeanor. The attorney held that the Commissioner should have specified the time and place, showing whether or not the officers were on or off duty. In the common acceptation of the term he said that loitering was the duty of an officer.; At the conclusion of Mr. Sheppard's speech the board adjourned to an adjoining room and sent for City Attorney Denny, who promulgated the rules governing the Metropolitan police force. A hurried consultation was held, and the Commissioners finally agreed to overrule Sheppard's motion to quash the charges, and the trial of Officers Ronacker and Cook in commenced.

Christian Cook, a merchant policemon who runs on Buchanan street, testified that on a Sunday morning some three weeks ago, he entered the saloon of Leo Rieger, No. 3 Buchanan street. It was about 1:30 o'c'ock, and two men had just finished scrubbing out. The proprietor was standing with his back to the counter talking to a young man named Cummings, while Patrolmen Ro-Rieger for some bitters; but the saloonnewed his request. The saloon-keeper finally said: "You know where the bitters are." Whereupon Cook walked behind the bar and took down the bottle containing the bitters he desired, and poured a small quantity into a "pony" whisky glass. He emptied when he returned he found that the officers Rieger under arrest giving away liquor on Sunday. Cook also testified that before going to the saloon he had seen two very suspicious looking young men, with weil filled sacks on their shoulders, hurrying along Buchanah street. Feeling convinced that they were not "straight," he blew his whistle several times, but the metropolitan officers failed to respond, and the young men disappeared. When he found the policemen he informed them of the above circumstance, but they seemed to take no interest whatever in the matter.

Leo Rieger next took the stand, but his testimony did not differ from that of Cook in the main points. The police, he said, remained in his place about an hour, and when Mr. Ronacker informed him that he was under arrest he thought he was merely Charlie Cummings testified that the officers were in the saloon for fully an hour, and that one of them (Conklin) was asleep a portion of the time.

Mr. Cottrell then introduced Frank Cavlor, an employe of the Big Four Railroad Company, and said that he wanted to prove by this man that Ronacker had been going about the ward in which he resides swearing that he would "make it warm for these - Democrats." The attorneys for the accused and the members of the board held, however, that as this testimony had no bearing on the case in hearing, it should not be received, and although Mr. Cottrell insisted, Caylor was not permitted to testify.

Robacker then made his statement. He said that Rieger had been in the habit of selling liquor after hours, and he had received instructions to watch his place. He further stated that Cook had poured a teaspoonful of whisky in the bitters. One of his superior officees had told him to "freeze out" all saloon-keepers on his beat who made it a point not to close at the regular time. and this was his reason for remaining in Rieger's place so long. In answer to a question he said that the superior officer referred to was Sergeant Travis. Captain Colbert had given him similar instructions.

Conklin testified next and denied the charge that he was asleep. A large number of other persons then testified as to the repulation of Ronacker, and they all declared, so far as they knew, he was an efficient officer. FARRELL'S CASE.

Farrell's case was then taken up. This officer arrested the bartender at the Bates House on a charge of selling liquor after 11 o'clock some evenings since, and as the evidence was altogether too weak to convict the man the case was dismissed by the May. or. When the officer entered the saloon two empty glasses were on the bar and a couple of men standing by them. Farrell put one of the glasses to his nose and found that it had contained gin. He at once placed the bartender under arrest, who claimed that the glasses had just been brought down from one of the rooms. Hon. John W. Kern, Reporter of the Supreme Court, Mr. Cottrell's main witness, not being present, Mayor Mc Master told the board what that gentleman had testified to in his court. In the City Court Mr Kern was the main witness for the defense, he testifying that no liquor had been sold at the bar after the clock struck 11. and that the glasses had been brought from the room of one of the guests on a tray just before the policeman entered the salcon. The board then considered the testimony generally and a motion to reinstate Farrel and Conklin carried, Mr. Cottrell voting in the negative. It was then resolved to take Ropacker's case under advisement.

ASKING FOR LANG'S SCALP. Mr. Cottrell then stated that he had a respintion to introduce, of which he need make no comment, as much had been said relative thereto slready. He handed the secretary the resolution, which read as follows: With a view of making the police force more efficient and for the purpose of making it harmon-lous in all its parts, it is the opinion of the Board of Police Commissioners that the superintendent be requested to tender his resignation to as to enable the board to appoint some one more acceptable to them and also ensole the board to make such needed changes as will very materially in-crease the efficiency of the force.

The resolution failed to pass, Messrs, Murphy and Morrison voting against it. The board then adjourned until Monday night.

Notwithstanding the disagreeable weather large and delighted audiences witnessed both performances of the famous trained horses at the Grand Opera House yesterday afternoon and last night. The wonderful exhibition they gave is as rare as it is beautiful. as novel, moral and unique as it is intensely interesting. The horses are seen dancing, swinging, teetering, rolling barrels, churning, as bell-ringers, distinguishing colors, at school, as soldiers, as sentinels, drill masters, mail carriers, actors, ball catchers, pumping water, Postmaster, host, guests, waiters, playing circus, leaping over each other, and doing many other marvelous things, while the cunning little mules play clown, ring bells, rock chairs, crack whips, laugh, etc. It is by far the best exhibition of the kind ever seen here, and should pack the house to overflowing during the remainder of the engagement.
